After you've been charged: A step-by-step chart

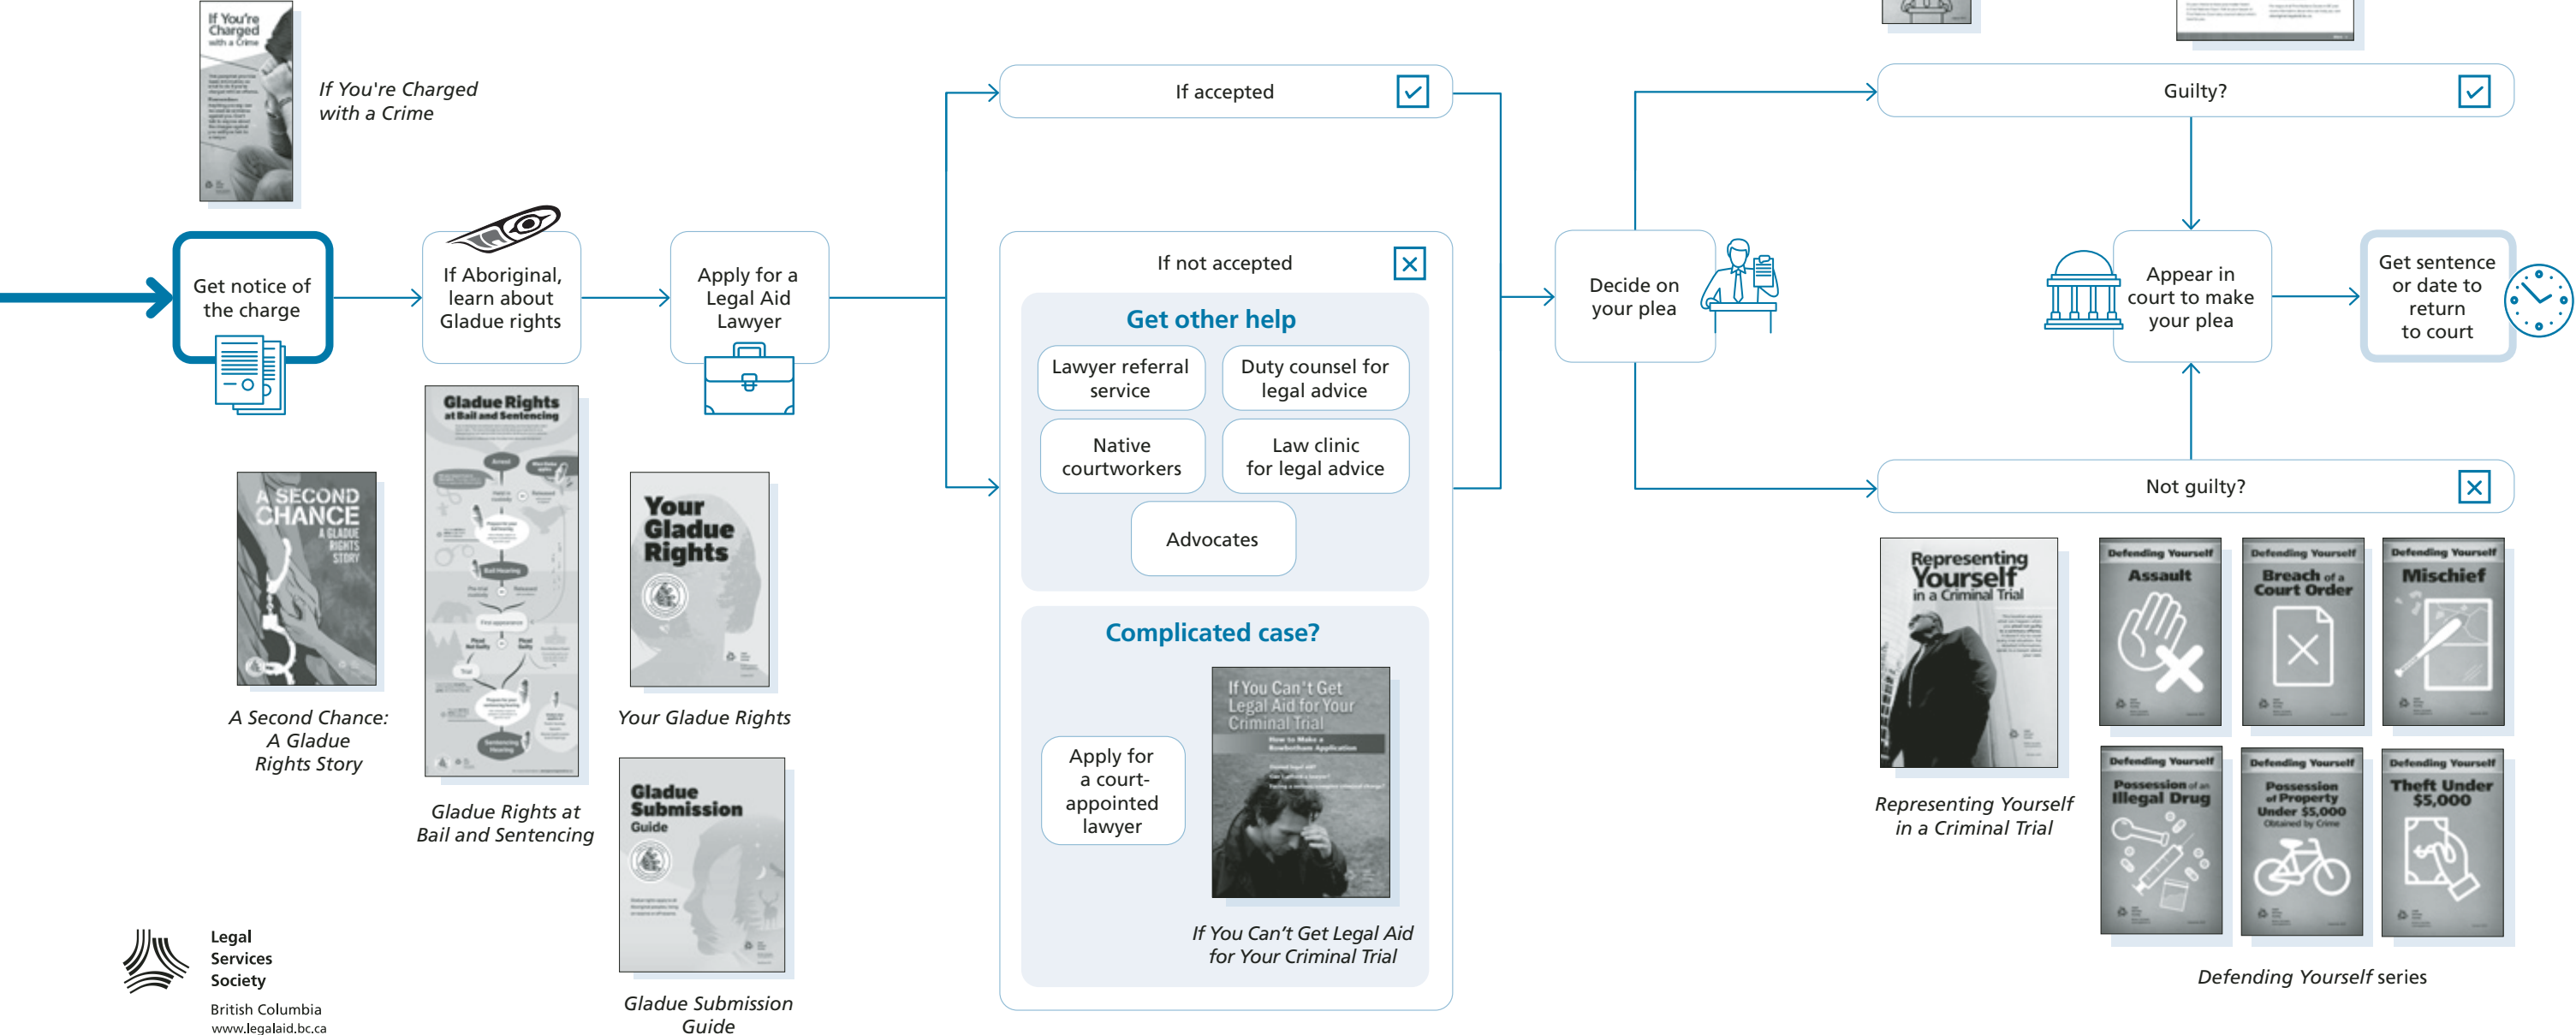

The flowchart under this flap shows how you can get help after you've been charged with a crime, including the free legal aid publications to help you at each stage.

Get these publications as soon as you can and read them before you go to court. Ask for them at the same place where you got this one or at any legal aid location.

You can also read these and other legal aid publications online at legalaid.bc.ca/read.

Thank you to the many field testers who contributed to this booklet series.

This booklet may not be commercially reproduced, but copying for other purposes, with credit, is encouraged.

Defending Yourself: Mischief is published by Legal Aid BC, a non-profit organization that provides legal aid to British Columbians. Legal Aid BC is separate from the BC government, its primary funder. It also receives grants from the Law Foundation and the Notary Foundation (of BC).

This booklet explains the law in general. It isn't intended to give you legal advice on your particular problem. Because each person's case is different, you may need to get legal help. The information in this booklet is up to date as of September 2019.

This guide is for people who want to plead not guilty to a charge of mischief. Use this guide if you don't qualify for legal aid, you can't afford a lawyer, and you plan to represent yourself (be your own lawyer) in court.

You should represent yourself only if you don't qualify for legal aid and you can't afford a lawyer. If you choose to do this, be sure to talk to a lawyer for advice before your trial. Some legal help is better than none. See "Where can I get legal help?" on page 13.

This guide explains how to defend yourself when you're charged with mischief. It doesn't try to cover every situation. For detailed information, speak to a lawyer about your case.

Are you Aboriginal?

If you're Aboriginal, you have certain rights under the Criminal Code of Canada, often called Gladue rights. These rights apply to all Aboriginal peoples: status or non-status Indians, First Nations, Métis, or Inuit. They also apply whether you live on or off reserve. The judge must consider your Gladue rights when sentencing you. This includes considering all options other than jail. For more information, ask for the publications below at the same place where you got this one. Or go to the website Aboriginal Legal Aid in BC at aboriginal.legalaid.bc.ca.

Introduction

What is mischief?

Mischief is the deliberate destruction of or damage to the lawful use of property. Property includes computer data. It includes vandalism, such as spray painting slogans on a building, breaking school windows, or letting the air out of someone's car tires. Destroying or altering data is also mischief. An example would be hacking into a computer or online account and then changing or deleting information.

Stopping people from using their own property or interfering with someone else's property can also be mischief.

For the full definition of mischief, see section 430 of the Criminal Code of Canada.

Could I go to jail?

Depending on the details of what happened and your criminal record, the Crown prosecutor (the lawyer who presents the case against you) can choose to charge you with either a summary or indictable offence. You could get a jail sentence for either type of offence.

A summary offence is a less serious crime. If the prosecutor proceeds "summarily," the maximum jail sentence a judge could give you is two years less a day. But the judge could give you a shorter sentence or a sentence that doesn't include jail at all (especially if you don't have a criminal record).

An indictable offence is a more serious crime. If the prosecutor proceeds "by indictment," the judge could give you a longer jail sentence. The maximum penalties range from up to two years less a day for mischief under $5,000, up to ten years for mischief over $5,000 or for mischief involving certain types of property, or life imprisonment if the mischief caused actual danger to life.

The first time you're in court, ask the prosecutor if they're proceeding "summarily" or "by indictment." The prosecutor should also say whether they're asking for a jail sentence.

What to do if your sentence could be strict

If the Crown prosecutor says they'll:

- o proceed "by indictment,"
- o ask for a sentence that includes jail, or
- o ask for a sentence that will have other serious consequences for you, immediately ask the judge to adjourn (postpone) your case so you can get legal help.

If the prosecutor proceeds "by indictment" (or is asking for a jail sentence), you'll usually have a better chance of getting legal aid — so be sure you understand how the prosecutor will proceed. Legal Aid BC may change its decision to not cover your case.

You can ask the court to appoint a government-funded lawyer to your case (a Rowbotham application) if:

- o you can't afford a lawyer and were denied legal aid;
- o the prosecutor says that they'll seek a jail sentence if you're found guilty, or will seek any other type of sentence that will have serious consequences for you; and
- o your case is too complicated for you to handle.

For more information, see the guide If You Can't Get Legal Aid for Your Criminal Trial.

Before the trial

Prepare your defence

When you prepare your defence, think about what evidence (information about the crime) you can use. Evidence includes witnesses, documents, videos, recordings, or your own personal testimony (telling your story under oath, in court).

Make sure the Crown prosecutor gave you all the evidence that they'll use (called the disclosure), such as security videotapes or witness statements. The prosecutor should also tell you who they'll call as a witness. You can send them a letter or email asking for this information. (See a sample letter in the guide Representing Yourself in a Criminal Trial.)

Prepare to give truthful and relevant evidence to the court.

For more information about the trial process, such as how to use witnesses, prepare questions, and decide whether to testify (speak) yourself, see Representing Yourself in a Criminal Trial.

To defend yourself against a charge of mischief, you may be able to use one (or more) of the following four points if they're true:

□ "I didn't damage the property."

You could show that it wasn't you who damaged the property or the property was already damaged and that you didn't cause any more damage to it.

□ “I thought I owned the property.”

You can try to prove that you honestly and reasonably thought you owned the property.

For example, perhaps you cut down a tree that you thought was in your yard but it was actually in your neighbour's yard (close to the property line). You believed that you had a right to cut down the tree because you thought you owned it.

But remember that even to be the owner of the damaged property isn't, in all cases, a defence to the charge against you. This could include a situation where property is owned jointly by a couple.

□ “It was an accident.”

You could show that you weren't acting recklessly and that the damage was an accident and not on purpose.

For example, perhaps you were carrying a ladder and you tripped and fell. The ladder broke your neighbour's window, but this didn't happen because you were reckless. In cases like this, it helps if you have a witness who can tell the court that you were acting responsibly when the damage happened.

□ “My Charter rights were violated.”

If the police got evidence of the mischief by violating your rights under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the judge might not let the Crown prosecutor use that evidence. And if that happens, and there is no other evidence proving your guilt, you can ask the judge to dismiss the charge against you.

For example, under the Charter, the police must do the following when they arrest you:

- o tell you immediately what they've arrested you for;
- o tell you immediately that you can talk to a lawyer, and let you do so in private before questioning you or taking any samples;
- o give you access to a phone; and
- o tell you that you can get legal help for free.

(Legal Aid BC has lawyers available 24 hours a day to talk over the phone for free to people in police custody. This is called the "Brydges Line.")

If the police didn't do all of these things (or other things that the Charter requires such as get a search warrant before searching your house or belongings), you can argue that they violated your rights. You would then argue that the prosecutor shouldn't be able to use any statements you made or other evidence that the police got by violating your rights.

However, the judge won't automatically throw out the evidence in question. You must also show that accepting the evidence will reflect badly on how justice is carried out in Canadian courts.

If you plan to argue that your Charter rights were violated, talk to a lawyer before your trial. Using the Charter is complicated and usually requires legal research. You must tell the prosecutor in advance if you plan to use this type of argument.

At the trial

What must the prosecutor prove?

At the trial, before you present your defence, the Crown prosecutor presents the Crown's case against you.

The prosecutor must prove beyond a reasonable doubt that you're guilty of all the parts (the elements) that make up the crime of mischief. To do this, the prosecutor presents evidence to the court, using witnesses, documents, videos, or recordings.

If the prosecutor tries to use evidence that they didn't tell you about in advance, you can object and ask the judge to dismiss the case or postpone the trial.

You can cross-examine (question) the prosecutor's witnesses. But you'll normally do so only if you disagree with their information. For details about how to cross-examine, see the guide Representing Yourself in a Criminal Trial.

For a judge to find you guilty of mischief, the prosecutor must prove the following things:

Your identity

The Crown prosecutor must prove that you're the person who committed the crime. To do this, the prosecutor will call witnesses, including police officers, to give evidence.

The witnesses will probably describe the person they saw commit the crime. Then the prosecutor will ask the witnesses to say if that person is in the courtroom.

The evidence, either from the witnesses or from other sources (such as fingerprints or videotapes), must show that you're the person who committed the crime.

□ Jurisdiction

The prosecutor must prove:

- that the crime happened in BC,
- the date of the crime, and
- the specific location where it happened.

These details are included on the Information. This is the official court form (listing the date, place, and type of offence) that the prosecutor gives you before the trial. The prosecutor must still prove these details at the trial.

Usually the prosecutor calls a witness to give evidence about the date and place of the crime. This witness will likely be the investigating police officer.

□ The value of the property

If you were charged with mischief to property worth more than $5,000, the prosecutor must prove that the property value was over $5,000. The prosecutor will get the owner (or the person in charge of the property) to state its value.

□ The ownership of the property

The prosecutor must prove that the property you interfered with belonged to someone else. They can do this by having the property owner (or the person in charge of the property) tell the court who the property belongs to. Again, the fact that you own the damaged property isn't, in all cases, a defence to the charge against you.

□ You damaged or destroyed the property

The prosecutor must prove that you damaged or destroyed the property. They'll have witnesses or other evidence to show the court how you did that. If possible, the prosecutor will bring the property to court and get someone to tell the court how it was damaged or destroyed. Then the prosecutor will have the property entered as an exhibit (piece of evidence).

□ You intended to damage or destroy the property or you were reckless

The prosecutor must prove that you intended to damage or destroy the property or that you were reckless and didn't care if you damaged it.

For example, the prosecutor can say that you intended to damage or destroy property if you threw a rock directly at a school window. But if you were just throwing rocks in a school yard, and one of them happened to break a window, the prosecutor may argue that you were reckless. In other words, you knew or should have known that you could destroy something, but you didn't care.

Affidavit evidence

Sometimes the prosecutor uses an affidavit to prove some of the points in the Crown's case. An affidavit is a document containing information that a person swears (promises) is true.

If the prosecutor plans to use an affidavit, you'll get a copy of this document before the trial. If you disagree with it, or if you think it should include other information, ask the court to make the person who swore the affidavit come to your trial. Then you can question that person about the information that they swear is true.

Present your case

After the Crown prosecutor finishes presenting the Crown's case, it's your turn.

You now have your chance to use the points you've prepared to use as your defence. You can use your gathered evidence, call witnesses, and, if you want to, give evidence as a witness yourself. You have the right to not testify. Ask a lawyer whether you should or not. See Representing Yourself in a Criminal Trial for more details.

Close your case

After you finish presenting your defence, you close your case. Tell the judge why you think the Crown prosecutor didn't prove that you're guilty beyond a reasonable doubt. Mention if you think the prosecutor's case was weak or inconsistent in any area. This summary is called your submission. See Representing Yourself in a Criminal Trial for more details.

What if the judge finds me guilty?

Once you and the Crown prosecutor finish speaking, the judge decides if you're guilty or not. If the judge finds you guilty, you'll get a sentence. The sentence you get depends on the details of the offence and your criminal record. It could be any of the following:

- o an absolute discharge (your record won't show a conviction)
- o a conditional discharge (you'll be regarded as not having been convicted if you meet conditions that the judge sets)
- o probation (a "suspended sentence" including, for example, community service)
- o a fine
- o a conditional sentence (most often means house arrest, which is like a jail term, but you serve it in the community)
- o a jail term (for up to two years less a day for summary offences; from up to two to ten years for some indictable offences; and up to life if the mischief caused actual danger to life)

(Note that a judge usually only grants a discharge when an accused person pleads guilty and doesn't have a previous criminal record.)

Speaking to the judge before you're sentenced

You get a chance to speak to the judge before they decide your sentence. (This is called speaking to sentence.) The judge will give you a chance to explain why you committed the crime, why you won't do it again, and whether you need help for any problems you may have that were connected to the crime. Speaking to sentence is important because it gives you a chance to explain your situation to the judge. You can ask for a lower sentence than what the Crown prosecutor is asking for.

Get the brochure Speaking to the Judge Before You're Sentenced and read it before you go to court.

Paying a fine

The maximum fine for most summary offences is $5,000.

If the judge fines you, you can ask for time to pay. Tell the judge how much you can pay each month. Later, if you find you can't pay on time, get the brochure If You Can't Pay Your Court Fine on Time. Do this as soon as possible.

Surcharge

You'll usually also have to pay a victim surcharge, which is thirty percent of your fine, or $100 for a summary offence, or $200 for an indictable offence. The judge can reduce the amount or drop the surcharge completely if you show that paying it would cause you undue hardship. For example, this could be because you:

- o are unemployed,
- o are homeless,
- o don't have assets, or
- o have significant expenses for your dependent(s).

Being in jail isn't considered an undue hardship.

Checklist: How well did the prosecutor do?

Use this checklist at your trial to see if the prosecutor makes the case against you.

The prosecutor must prove all of these things:

- your identity (you were the one who committed the mischief)
- jurisdiction
 - crime happened in BC
 - date of the crime (for summary offences, the Information must be sworn within one year of the date of the crime)
 - town, city, or municipality where the crime took place
- value of the property
- ownership of the property
- you damaged or destroyed the property
- you intended to damage or destroy the property or you were reckless

Remember:

- o If the Crown prosecutor's case is weak or inconsistent in one of the above areas, mention this in your submission (see page 9) when you close your case.

Where can I get legal help?

Even if you can't afford a lawyer to represent you in court, it's a good idea to talk to a lawyer before your trial.

To find one:

- o Speak to a duty counsel lawyer at the courthouse where you're charged. Duty counsel are lawyers who give free legal advice. When they're available, they can give you brief, summary advice about the charges against you, court procedures, and your legal rights. Duty counsel can also speak on your behalf the first time you appear in court, but they can't act as your permanent lawyer.

Call Legal Aid BC at 604-408-2172 (Greater Vancouver) or 1-866-577-2525 (elsewhere in BC) or your local courthouse to find out when duty counsel will be there. (See the Provincial Court of BC website at provinciacourt.bc.ca/locations-contacts for links to courthouse locations.)

- o Contact a lawyer in private practice. Find out if the lawyer is willing to help and what it will cost. Even if you pay for just two meetings to get basic advice about your particular case, it could be worth the cost.

- o If you don't know a lawyer who handles criminal cases, contact the Lawyer Referral Service (run by Access Pro Bono). They'll give you some suggestions. You can meet for free with a lawyer they recommend for a half hour. You can see whether you want to hire the lawyer and how much it would cost.

Call the service at 604-687-3221 (Greater Vancouver) or 1-800-663-1919 (elsewhere in BC).

- o Access Pro Bono also runs free legal advice clinics throughout the province. To make an appointment, call 604-878-7400 or 1-877-762-6664.

- If you live in Greater Vancouver, you may be able to get help from the University of British Columbia's Law Students' Legal Advice Program (LSLAP). You can get free legal advice or help from LSLAP if you're charged with a summary offence and the Crown prosecutor isn't asking for a jail sentence if you're found guilty. Call 604-822-5791 to find the location of the nearest LSLAP clinic.
- If you live in Victoria, the Law Centre may be able to help you. Call 250-385-1221 for more information.
- You can get support from a Native Courtworker. The Native Courtworkers and Counselling Association of BC helps Aboriginal people involved in the criminal justice system. Call 604-985-5355 (Greater Vancouver) or 1-877-811-1190 (elsewhere in BC).
- A legal advocate can also support you. Find a local organization on the HelpMap at clicklaw.bc.ca/helpmap.
- For more information about the law, go to clicklaw.bc.ca. Clicklaw has links to legal information, education, and help. You can find out about your rights and options, get toll-free numbers for law-related help, and learn about the law and the legal system.
